Dear friends,

I still remember the first time I visited the Horton’s Kids Community Resource Center. It was during our Thanksgiving meal distribution in 2010. It was crowded! Everywhere I looked, I saw staff talking and laughing with families. A steady flow of children ran in and out of the Center—some to pick up food, others to visit with staff, and some to pick up a book or two to take home. Regardless of the reason, they were all happy to be there. I was happy too—I’m not sure I’d ever experienced a place so warm and full of energy. Nearly eight years later, it’s grown in size and scope, and the Center continues to be one of my favorite places. It is the heart of Horton’s Kids.

With this year’s Annual Report, we wanted to bring Horton’s Kids to you. Take a tour of our bustling Community Resource Center and see how our programs work together to empower children in three key areas essential to their success: academics, youth development, and health and basic needs. Then, flip the page to hop on the bus and follow us as Horton’s Kids expands participants’ perspectives with activities throughout the city.

Horton’s Kids participants live in Wellington Park, one of DC’s most violent and under-resourced communities. In 2017, we served 500 children in grades K-12 growing up in this Anacostia neighborhood, where the average family income is less than $10,000 and only 19% of adults have a high school diploma.

We have worked with the Wellington Park community for nearly 30 years, and 2017 was the fifth anniversary of our onsite Center. Located at the entrance to Wellington Park, the Center is a daily stop for children and families. Since its creation, it has grown substantially both in square footage and breadth of service and, by extension, our impact on the children we serve. But no matter how things change, one thing remains the same: Horton’s Kids continues to focus on each individual child who passes through the doors. Just like when they enter their own home, children who come into the Center are greeted by name by an adult who cares about them and is there to help them succeed.

I invite you to visit the Center to see our work firsthand. With the comprehensive nature of our programming and the strong relationships we have with the children and families we serve, there is no better way to understand Horton’s Kids.

On behalf of Horton’s Kids, I am so grateful to the dedicated supporters who make our work possible: our volunteers, board members, donors, and community partners. Thank you for standing with Horton’s Kids in 2017. I look forward to continuing to work together to empower the children of Wellington Park in the years to come.

With gratitude,

Robin Berkley
Executive Director
Step Inside the Horton’s Kids Community Resource Center

The Center is the hub of Horton’s Kids’ programming. It’s a safe space, open six days a week, located at the start of a neighborhood known as Wellington Park. All nearby children in grades K-12 are welcome at our Center and can participate in any of our programs. Whenever we’re open, bulletproof glass and armed security guards ensure children’s safety.

come in!
For many children, the Center is their first stop on the way home from school. They’re greeted by name as they walk in, and several of the staff members who welcome them – like Antwain Franklin, pictured left – are also parents of Horton’s Kids participants.

healthy meals
The Center is often the only consistent source of healthy food in the children’s neighborhood. Kids can count on Horton’s Kids for fresh meals and snacks, and families can visit our food pantry. We distributed 16,850 meals this year.

library
No matter their reading level, children can find engaging books – and take them home to keep! – in the Horton’s Kids library. We distributed 1,356 books in the community this year.

basic needs
Horton’s Kids distributes resources like diapers and toiletries, as well as seasonal items like backpacks, school supplies, and warm winter coats. These supplies make sure kids are set up for success.

life skills
In weekly life skills classes, older youth learn about everything from financial literacy to sexual health. Topics in 2017 included job readiness, interviewing skills, and social media safety.

homework help
Kids study and finish their schoolwork at our nightly Homework Help. This year, children spent 867 hours working with adults on homework.

microsoft computer lab
Our 10 computers enable kids and families to work on school assignments and resumes. For many community members, our lab is the only source of internet in the neighborhood.

discussion groups
Our “Rap Sessions” discussion group for older youth is a safe environment for teenagers to discuss their feelings, concerns, and hopes. This year, participants focused on safe relationships and coping with neighborhood violence. Our 7th grade group, “Agents of Change,” helps participants transition from childhood to adolescence.

family engagement
Our staff have deep relationships with adults in the community. Parents participate in programs like our fatherhood group and family game nights. In 2017, we also launched our Parents’ Advisory Council, where parents share regular feedback on how Horton’s Kids can best support children.

mental health
Many of our participants are under chronic stress and face trauma from the high rate of violence in the community. Children have access to mental health counseling right in the Center. 25 of our most at-risk participants meet with a therapist each week.

Nyasia, 12th Grade
“‘If you need food, you come to Horton’s Kids. If you need help with homework, you come to Horton’s Kids. Whatever you want to talk about, Horton’s Kids is here to help.’” - Nyasia, 12th Grade tutoring
Three days a week, participants in grades K-12 hop on the bus at our Community Resource Center to go to tutoring at the Rayburn House Office Building, U.S. Department of Education, and U.S. Department of Transportation. 93% of participants improved their literacy skills over the school year.

mentoring
Horton’s Kids knows – and the research backs us up – that mentors have a powerful impact on a child’s life. Over the 2016-2017 school year, we increased the number of older youth paired with a mentor. We also offered more trainings and structured events to help mentors and mentees bond.

college and career readiness
This school year, we led participants on college and career-focused tours, including a tour of nearby colleges and universities. Our Volunteer Council also hosted a career fair, where participants learned about 12 career fields from experts. Plus, we’re recruiting more volunteer college & career coaches, who ensure each child is following a plan to realize postsecondary goals.

field trips and parties
Field trips to local museums, swimming pools, and even trampoline parks give kids the opportunity to learn, have fun, and stay active in a new environment. Kids and their parents come together to celebrate Halloween, Christmas, and Easter at parties with the Junior League of Washington.

summer camp
Studies show that camp can boost relationship skills, self-identity, appreciation of diversity, and independence. It makes it easier for children to imagine leaving home and going to college. This summer, we sent 28 kids to camp with all their necessary supplies.

sports and enrichment
Participants build teamwork, communication skills, and confidence during boxing, basketball, flag football, and strength training sessions. Children also develop hobbies and learn new interests in coding club and arts enrichment.

Outside the Community Resource Center
Horton’s Kids also offers programs that take children beyond their neighborhood. Exposure to new environments can boost kids’ optimism and inspire future plans.

Deputy Director Jhae Thompson joined Horton’s Kids in 2017. In addition to overseeing the day-to-day management of all of Horton’s Kids’ programs, she also leads our data and program evaluation, making sure our work is as effective as possible.

This year, we introduced robust evaluation tools, including a survey of social-emotional development that allows us to compare our results with similar organizations nationally. We began capturing more information about our program results and making data-driven decisions about what will have the biggest impact. And, we shared data with children’s schools, ensuring that all adults in a child’s life – including parents, teachers, our staff, and volunteers – have the information they need to help every child succeed.

Data & Evaluation
I am a determined and smart person. Horton’s Kids helped make me who I am today.

At Horton’s Kids, I gained the knowledge that you don’t have to be a product of your environment.

When I wanted to give up and no one else cared, Horton’s Kids was there for me.

They changed my mindset about life and goals. Being in Horton’s Kids for over 10 years has made me an optimistic person.

Volunteers

In 2017, 466 volunteers contributed 4,833 hours of their time to Horton’s Kids.

Horton’s Kids is powered by volunteers. In fact, for the first 12 years of our history, we were entirely volunteer-run. Volunteers make all of our programs possible, serving as tutors, mentors, college and career coaches, homework helpers, special event supporters, and more. Thank you to all of the volunteers who partnered with us in 2017. We’re grateful to have your support!

Group Volunteering

In 2017, we were fortunate to have several groups of employees, teammates, and friends come together to volunteer at the Community Resource Center and lead donation drives at their offices.

The team from Willkie Farr & Gallagher volunteered regularly at Homework Help while other groups led clean-ups of our Community Resource Center and packed backpacks for the start of the school year.

2017 Karin Walser Commitment to Service Award

The Karin Walser Commitment to Service Award, named for our founder, honors one of our many exceptional supporters who embody one of Horton’s Kids’ core beliefs: dedicated volunteer service can change a child’s life.

Carl Ehrlich was the recipient of the first annual Karin Walser Commitment to Service Award at this year’s Give Thanks & Give Back reception. Carl runs popular flag football sessions for participants of all ages and a weightlifting program for older youth. A dedicated volunteer both on and off the field, he has also fundraised to send participants to summer camp and serves as a one-on-one mentor.
